It was thought that the slide was caused by highwaymen, who exploded giant powder to stop the train, but that is not probable. Natural gas has been discovered escaping from the earth in this vicinity, and the theory advanced now, is that a subteranean chamber exploded, causing an upheaval on the hill, and hence the land slide. No lives were lost, although portions of the train were completely destroyed.

One of the Greatest Finds of the Age on Pomeroy Mountain.

BOULDER. Colo., Aug. 7.—[Special tele-gram to The Herald.]—Only a few weeks silver strike on Pomeroy mountain, near Caribou, the details of which were so wonderful that many doubted the truth of them. To-day comes the report of another strike only 500 feet from the first that is even richer and more wonderful than the into a mountain about three inches wide and almost solid silver, the glistening white of native silver mingled with the more sombre color of horn silver. The strike was made a few days ago on Pomercy mountain by John C. Stewart. He exhibited specimens here to day weighing from one to three pounds each and almost solid silver. The sight has awakened all the old mining spirit and several will leave for the new field to-morrow to investigate and prospect.

Pomeroy Mountain, where the find was made, is situated right on the main range about a mile northwest of Caribou and just across Caribon hill, from which through the old Caribon, No Name, Beicher, Hor man and others, millions have been pro duced. Here is located one of the finest and richest silver districts in the state of Colorado, though for several years the camp has been dead by reason of litigation in the mines and a lack of transportation. Many years ago when Caribou was a busy camp, prospectors found several large pieces of float at the foot of Pomeroy mountain, composed of almost solid native silver, silver giance and horn silver.
